Episode 17: Japan at the Crossroads

This episode examines the image of Japan: consistently admired in the Nation Brands Index (#4 in 2020) but apparently out of step with the behaviors that bring strength in the Good Country Index (#26 in 2020). Simon and Nick look at some of Japan's strategies to maintain a global presence such as hosting the Olympics and the upcoming Expo 2025 in Osaka; successful behavior such as the collective action of fans; cleaning stadiums during the soccer World Cup; and underlying weaknesses including a decline in knowledge of foreign languages and a reluctance to welcome migrants. Japan emerges as a unique actor with tremendous advantages but one that needs to take care to adapt its approach to 21st century priorities and global needs or risk a decline in its standing.
