Episode 47: Africa on the move? The Prospects for a Better Image

In this episode, Nick and Simon discuss the shifting image of Africa, taking a lead from the latest version of the Anholt-Ipsos Nation Brands Index. Countries discussed include Egypt and Morocco, South Africa, Kenya, Tanzania and Botswana. Simon argues that external knowledge of culture is the key and proposes a collective effort in that regard like a joint equivalent of the British Council. Nick notes some single-country successes like Angola's win at the Venice Art Biennale. They agree that progress is slow and conclude with a discussion of the increased presence of China on the continent.
